Thanks so much for your time today in explaining the process to me!

As I explained, ~~I took a terrorism course several years ago as part of my Ph.D. program.~~ The professor decided to compile student papers and submit it for book publication. I've attached the ~~book chapter that I co-authored with another student.~~

As you will see from the citations, I accessed ~~only public sources~~ for this chapter. I did not write the chapter as "SA Tonya DeSa", but as Tonya DeSa, student.

I have not had anything published to date....therefore I did not know of the prepublication review process....it wasn't brought to my attention until I was discussing the bio with my CDC. Re the bio, does the Bureau prefer the "sanitized" version as I have it written? Or is it OK to say I work for the FBI but with a disclaimer that the opinions, views are those of the author and not the FBI, DOJ, blah blah..... I actually have no preference.

If at all possible, please expedite the review. The professor has submitted the material to the publisher and is awaiting proof pages....I've explained the prepublication review process to my professor and my co-author. If approval is not granted, it will require re-working the chapter as well as the intro and conclusion written by my professor.

I apologize for the oversight on my part. Your attention to my request is much appreciated!

Tonya

Thank you for getting back in touch with me so quickly. I am attaching an article for FBI pre-publication approval entitled, "Questioning Reorganization." I have not yet solicited a media outlet about the idea, but would likely approach a business journal or magazine once given the green light.

As you will see, the article is rather short, discusses general management principles, and contains no FBI-specific information. I hope these factors will reduce the burden of reviewing it.

I would be grateful if you would confirm receipt by replying to this email.
